PREFACE

This book presents for our understanding what has come through from our past to our present -- a priceless legacy, our heritage.

The initial research on the Woodard Family History was done during the late 1960's and early 1970's by Randle C. Woodard who originally began the research to identify ancestors of his father. The late Ruth Dickey helped Randle in the initial stages of the research. However, it became necessary to identify ancestors other than the immediate family, and as time went by, it became necessary and appropriate to list these families in this book.

This research was interrupted for a period of time from 1974-1989 when Randle C. Woodard was operating a successful factory in Southern California.

In the summer of 1989 Randle purchased a sophisticated software program designed for serious amateur and professional genealogists. He solicited the assistance of his nephew R.G. Woodard of Houston, Texas to help enter his original research data composed of about 600 names into a computer.

In October of 1989 Randle was joined in his research by a cousin, Audie W. Woodard of Seminole, Oklahoma. Audie successfully transferred the data to his computer in Seminole and began the task of bringing everything up to modern day times.

About this same time a distant relative, A.M. Cooper of California joined the research team and contributed a vast amount of research to what had originally been done.

By the time of this publication the Woodard list continues to increase to its present size of some 2500 names.

A word about the organization of this book. The numbering system is called a Register system. Each child within the family is given a small Roman numeral to indicate his or her place within the family. If there is an Arabic numeral preceding the Roman number, it is an indication that further information on that child will be found under that number in a later part of the book. If there is no Arabic number, no further information is given on that child. For example, the progenitor of the family is given the number 1, and his children are numbered 2, 3, 4, etc. if there is further information on them. They will be found under those numbers in the book. Beginning with the second generation a parent is always referenced by the preceding generations' first name. Surnames appear in alphabetical order in the index and individuals are listed in alphabetical order under their surname.

A word about how to use this book. For example, the index shows Louis Woodard as being located on pages 48 and 66. Turn to page 48 and you will find Louis listed as the xi child of Kader Woodard with an Arabic number 96 by his name. On page 66 under Arabic number 96 you will find Louis Woodard, his wife and children numbered accordingly. Notice that Louis' name is referenced by all his preceding generations which include his father Kader; Kader's father, Stephen; Stephen's father, Thomas Jr; etc. In this manner one can readily find his own name and can see his own referenced generation.

The scope of this book is limited by several factors:

1. difficulties brought about ascertaining the where abouts of the different branches of the family.

2. lack of interest shown by many by their failure to respond when contacted about their family.

3. lack of historical records on different members of the family.

It is hoped that this book will provoke pride, thought, and interest in the Woodard Genealogy and that Woodards all over the country will stand tall, and announce to the world with enthusiasm that it is great to be a Woodard.

Gratitude is expressed to the many family members who have contributed material for this publication.

YOUR NAME

You got it from your father
Was the best he had to give
And gladly he bestowed it
It's yours while you live
You may lose the walk he gave you
And another you may claim
But remember when you're tempted
Be careful of his name
It was fair the day you got it
A worthy name to bear
When he took it from his father
There was no dishonor there
Through the years he proudly wore it
To his father he was true
And that name was clean and spotless
When he passed it on to you
Oh there is much that he has given that
He values not at all
He has watched you break your play things
In the days when you were small
You lost his knife he gave you
And you scattered many a game
But you'll never hurt your father
If you're careful with his name
It's yours to wear forever

It's yours to wear the while you live

Yours perhaps some distant morning

To another boy to give

And you'll smile as did your father

With a smile that all can share

It's a clean name and a good one

You are giving him to wear

INTRODUCTION

History of Surname Woodard

In this space age of mental and physical activity, when so much is accomplished with ease and rapidity, it has been deemed desirable to have a published history of a family bearing the name Woodard, said family being in part traced back to the Vikings and settled in Normandy, France, in 911 or 912 A.D. Later was part of the Normans who invaded England, in 1066, and arriving in Jamestown, Virginia, in 1619. The work, accordingly, was commenced, impossibilities were undertaken, as is often the case in news undertakings proved a failure, and operated as a discouragement.

However, the work was continued, many difficulties were overcome, and there is now present to the reader the result of considerable labor and research. In examining the literature of the past this author finds that great attention has been paid to family histories; this attention has varied in different nations. Prior to the Christian era there are records of families, more or less complete, for many generations, and in that book, the Bible, they stand forth as witnesses to, and proof of, much that is found therein.

As far as my observation extends, the English speaking, since the Christian era, have taken special interest in such matters. Until about 1100 A.D. most people in Europe had one name (this is still true in some primitive countries today). As the population increased it became awkward to live in a village wherein perhaps 1/3 of the male were named John, another sizable percentage named William, and so forth. And so, to distinguish one John from another a second name was needed.

There were four primary sources for these second names. They were: a man's occupation, his location, his father's name or some peculiar characteristic of his. Here are some examples:

Occupation: the local house builder, food prepared, grain grinder and suit maker would be named respectively: John Carpenter, John Cook, John Miller, and John Taylor.

Location: The John who lived over the hill became known as John Overall, the one who dwelled near a stream might be dubbed John Brook or perhaps John Outbreak.

Patronymical (father's name): Many of these surname can be recognized by the termination - son, such Williamson, Jackson, etc. Some ending used by other countries to indicate "son" are: Armenian, - ian, Danish and Norwegian - sen, Finnish - nen, Greek - pulos, Spanish - ez and Polish - weicz. Prefixes denoting "son" are the Welsh - Ap, the Scotch and Irish - Mac, the Normans - Fitz and the French - Fils. The Irish O', incidentally, denotes grandfather.

Characteristics: An unusually small person might be labeled Small, Short, Little or Lytle. A large man might be named Large, Long, Lang or Longfellow. Many persons having characteristics of certain animals would be given the animal name. Example: a sly person might be named Fox, a filthy person - Hogg, a good swimmer - Fish, etc.

In addition to needing an extra name for identification, one occupational group found it necessary to go a step further:

The fighting man: The fighting man of the middle ages wore a metal suit of armor for protection. Since this suit of armor included a helmet that completely covered the head, a knight in full battle dress was unrecognizable. To prevent friend from attacking friend during heat of battle, it became necessary for each knights to identify himself. Many knights accomplished this task by painting colorful patterns on their battle shields. These patterns were also woven into cloth surcoats which were worn over a suit of armor. Thus was born the term "coat-of-arms". As this practice grew more popular, it became more and more likely that two knights unknown to each other might be using the same insignia. To prevent this, records were kept that granted the right to a particular pattern to a particular knight. His immediate family also shared his right to display these arms. In some instances, these records have been persevered and/or compiled into book form. The records list the family names and an exact description of the coat-of-arms to that family. Interest in heraldry is increasing daily. This is especially true among people who have a measure of family pride and who resent attempts of our society to reduce each individual to a series of numbers stored some- where in a computer. In the present day and age, coat-of-arms is one of the rare devices remaining that can provide an incentive to preserve our heritage. This author anticipates that the reader will agree that it is much more than just a wall decoration.

The surname Wadard (Woodard) has been immortalized in the Bayeux Tapestry, now displayed in Bishop Odo's former Palace across from the Cathedral of Bayeux, France. The 11th and 12th century spelling of Woodard was Wadard or Wudard. The 13th century spelling had several variations, as indicated as follows: It was found that a "Wadard" 'homo- episcopi' (man of Bishop) held lands of Bishop Odo. Further research indicated that he was an ecclesiastical Norman Knight that fought with Duke of Normandy in conquest of England in 1066. Others: John Fils Wudard, 1168. Alan Wodard, 1273; Wodard atte Barre, Edward I; Wudaardus de Rosshebrok, 1148-56; Walterus filius Wodard, 1227; Walter Wudard, 1221; John Wodard, 1279; and many others. Different spellings of the same original surnames was a common occurrence. Various dictionaries of surnames indicate the name to be patronymical in origin. This author must disagree with these theories. Since the name is a very old one, it has gone through several languages, and language changes. French, Latin, Old (formerly known as Anglo-Saxon), Middle and Modern English. Old English dates from 449 to about 1100, Middle, from 1100 to 1450, and Modern in various stages from 1450 to 1500 to present. The /u/ was pronounced oo as in food, during the Middle English to Modern English, Since the spelling of names were recorded as pronounced, the pronun- ciation change brought about today's present spelling "Woodard".

This author found the Woodward and Woodard names to be completely separate blood lines. The name "Woodward" is a compounded one, con- sisting Wood and Ward, and is a pure English name, signifying a keeper of the forest. As indicated above the name "Woodard" received its origin into England from a Norman knight whose personal name was "Wadard".

This author recognizes the fact that it is impossible to establish direct descent, by legal process, from a companion of the Conqueror. Registration of birth, marriage and death did not become compulsory until 1533, and up to then, except perhaps in cases of people nationally prominent, the only records were those of ownership of land and summoning to military service. Nonetheless, it is reasonable to claim descendent from families that may have been founded in the eleventh century, especially if the name is the same as those then recorded. For example, this authors claim to be a descendent of Wadard, depicted in the Bateaux Tapestry, is based on the presence for centuries of men of the Woodard name living in England, and bearing the same surname. As in many families, there is a break in continuity for some years after 1349, when two-thirds of the population in England was wiped out by the black death.

Among the many records and books this author examined during the course of this research, the one that is held in the highest authority was authored by King, "The Normans and their Descendants Residing in England and America". The book was published in about 1875. Mr. King traced approximately 3000 Norman families. He was able to compare records of the Normans in France and England for several hundred years, and was able to trace the identity of families, and even individuals, in the two countries. His conclusion as it relates to the Woodard's, is as follows:

> "Woodard, or Wadard. Wadard came to England with the Conqueror 1066 held estates under Odo of Bayeux in several counties (Ellis, Introduction Doomsday, ii 404). Henry and Simon Wadard 1278, in Sussex, were distrained to compel them to be knighted (PPW)

Coat of Arms

Woodard

HISTORIOGRAPHY

The Woodard Coat-of-Arms illustrated above was drawn by an heraldic artist from information officially recorded in ancient heraldic archives. Documentation for the Woodard Coat-of-Arms design can be found in Burke's General Armory. Heraldic artists of old developed their own unique language to describe an individual Coat-of-Arms. In their language, the Arms (shield) is as follows:

> "Ar. on a bend cotised sa. three martlets of the field, a border engr. az."

When translated the blazon also describes the original colors of the Woodard Arms as it appeared centuries ago.

Family mottos are believed to have originated as battle cries in medieval times. A Motto was not recorded with this Woodard Coat-of-Arms.

The fact of the recording of a Coat-of-Arms means its bearer's surname had its origin at least as far back as medieval times. As not everyone was granted a Coat-of-Arms.

The Normans

The present day Woodard has a small speck of Viking blood in his veins. A history of the Woodard name indicates that at one time ancient ancestors lived in Normandy, France. A distant relative, who held land under Bishop Odo, establishes this fact.

Bishop Odo played a major roll in assembling the Armed Forces used by the Duke of Normandy, which invaded England and defeated the Anglo- Saxon at Hastings, October 14, 1066 A.D. Further study indicated that the inhabitants in Normandy during this period were primarily Nadic people who were formerly part of the Northmen or Sea Rovers, or the so called Vikings. The home of the Northmen was in the three Scandina- vian countries of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. They were a hardy, vigorous race, toughened by the constant hardships of northern winters and storm swept seas. Tall, blond men, vain of their gold ornaments and scarlet cloaks, their ringmail and carved sword hilts, never so happy as when their long-handled battles-axes clove through the ranks of their enemies - such were the Vikings, as those of the Northmen were called who set out on piratical raids in ever-increasing numbers from the end of the eighth century. They plundered the seacoast cities of Europe for more than a hundred years.

In 891, the German King, Arnulf, defeated a large Danish army on the lower Rhine and drove them out of that district. Thereafter, the settlements of the Northmen were confined to lower reaches of the Seine, and the raids on other parts soon ceased. In 911 or 912, the land about the lower Seine, known thereafter as Normandy, was ceded to the Northmen by the French King, Charles the Simple. Their leader, the famous Duke Rollo, became a vassal of the French King, though a very independent one, and was converted to Christianity. Further immigration from Denmark continued for some time and Normandy occupied a rather anomalous position as at once a Scandinavian colony and a French duchy. By the end of the tenth century, the Normans had adopted the religion, speech, and culture of the French people among whom they lived.

The Normans were one of those few races of men whose extraordinary mental and physical energies have exercised a profound and enduring influence over the world. They were a race of the same class as the Greek, the Roman, or the Saracen, whose actions fill the pages of history, and will remain engraved on the memory of man as long as humanity itself endures.

Several centuries has elapsed since the world has known the Normans in England under the form of a separate and distinct nationality. They have been for that space of time inextricably blended with other races in England, and other parts of the world, and the modern inhabitants of these countries are unable to determine the early nationality to which whey individually owe their origin. Let it then be permitted to direct closer attention to Normans, as the most conspicuous among the early races of England, and in the first place to the character and exploits in the tenth and eleventh centuries. It is here proposed to quote the testimony of some of the most eminent historians in relation to the Norman character, because it possesses far more value and authority than any other evidence that might be collected from other sources, representing as it does the matured opinion of men perfectly conversant with the subject on which they have written, and whose testimony may be considered to be free from bias or prejudice.

The first whose description of the Norman characteristic deserves attention is Lord Macaulay, who has himself Celtic origin. Lord Macaulay says:

> "The Normans were then foremost rate of Christendom. Their valor and courage had made them conspicuous amongst the rovers which Scandinavia had set forth to ravage Western Europe. At length one of the feeble heirs of Charlemagne ceded to the strangers a fertile province... In province they founded a mighty state, which gradually extended its influence over the neighboring principalities of Brittany and Maine. Without laying aside the valor which had been the terror of every land from the Elbe to the Pyrenees, the Normans rapidly acquired and more than all, the knowledge and refinement which they found in the country where they settled. Their courage secured their territory against foreign invasion. They established internal order, such as had been long unknown in the Frank Empire. The embraced Christianity, and with Christianity they learned a great part of what the clergy had to teach. They abandoned their native speech and adopted the French tongue, in which the Latin was the predominant element. They speedily raised their new language to a dignity and importance which it had never possessed. They found it a barbarous jargon; they fixed it in writing; and they employed it in legislation, in poetry, and in romance. They renounced that brutal intemperance to which all the other branches of the great German family were too much inclined.
> That chivalrous spirit which has exercised so powerful an influence on the politics, the morals, and manners of the European nations was found in the highest exaltation amongst the Norman nobles. These nobles were distinguished also by their skill in negotiation and by a natural eloquence, which whey assiduously cultivated. But their fame was derived from their military exploits. Every country, from the Atlantic Ocean to the Red Sea, witnessed the prodigies of their discipline and valor. One Norman knight, at the head of a handful of warriors, scattered the Celts of Connaught. Another founded the monarchy of the Two Scilies, and saw the Emperors of the East and West fly before his arms. A third, the Ulysses of the first Crusade, was invested by his fellow soldiers with sovereignty of Antioch; and a fourth, whose name lives in the great poem of Tasso, was celebrated throughout Christendom as the bravest and most generous of the champions of the Holy Sepulchre."

"The Norman," says Mr. Freeman, "were the Saracers of Christendom, spreading themselves over every corner of the world, and appearing in almost every character, none knew better how to hold their own against pope and prelate; the special children of the Church were as little disposed to unconditional obedience as the most stiff-necked of Ghibilines." "To free England," he continues, "the Norman gave a race of tyrants: to enslave Sicily he gave a line of beneficent rulers. But to England he gave also a conquering nobility, which in a few generations, became a truly English in England as it had become French in Normandy. If he overthrew our Harolds and our Waltheofs, he gave a Fitz-Walter and a Bigod to win back the rights for which Harold and Waltheof had fallen.

Art, under his auspices, produced alike the stern grandeur of Caen and Ely, and the brilliant gorgeousness of Palermo and Monreale. In a word, the indomitable vigor of the Scandinavian, joined to the buoyant vivacity of the Gaul, produced the conquering and ruling race of Europe."

The destinies of this imperial race are thus described by a great historian. Froude says:

"The Normans in occupying both England and Ireland, were but fulfilling the work for which they were especially qualified and gifted. They were born rulers of man, and were forced by the name of necessity which has brought the decrepit kingdoms of Asia under the authority of England and Russia to take management, eight centuries ago, of the anarchic nations of Western Europe.

In contemplating the Norman race, then which became seated in England in the eleventh century, we are to recognize in it one of the most extraordinary manifestations of human intellect and power that the history of the world affords; and we are hence impelled at once to demand further details of the actual life and attendant conditions of a race so singular and remarkable. We are led to inquire, what was the real character and nature of the settlement of the Normans in England? Was it merely the migration of a small body of nobles? Was it, on the other hand, an immigration as truly national as that of the Saxons had been? What was to be the destiny of this new race? Was it, like some mere military aristocracies, predestined to speedy decay, and to ultimate extinction? Was it to be irretrievable lost amidst the masses of the nations whom it had subdued? Was its empire to fall into the hands of an alien nationality? Are those Norman laws, institutions, language, and national attributes, which in England and America bear such potent testimony to common origin, merely the memorials of a race that has long passed away, and to which the actual inhabitants of these countries bear as remote a relation as they do to the unknown races which fabricated stone implements or were contemporary with the mammoth?

Or is the reverse of this the truth? Is the Norman race still living - still great, prosperous, progressive, and more than ever multitudinous? Is it still the producing new nations? Is it still in the van of human progress, yet still advancing with firm, practical, deliberate, and masculine intelligence?

Such are some of the questions which suggest them selves on perusing the narrative of the adventurous exploits of the Normans; and they are questions which, with all the respect due to the eminent writers who have recorded those exploits, have not yet received from them the attention to which their interest and their importance are entitled.

Mr. Freeman gives expression to the views most prevalent on this subject. "The indomitable vigor of the Scandinavian, joined to the buoyant vivacity of the Gaul, produced the conquering and ruling race of Europe. And yet that race, as a race, has vanished. It had everywhere been absorbed by the races which it had conquered." "In Old England," continues the same accomplished writer, "the Norman race has sunk beneath the influence of a race less brilliant, but more enduring than his own. The Norman has vanished from the world, but he has indeed left a name behind him." So, too, Gibbon has said, "The adventurous Normans who had raised so many trophies in France, England, and Ireland, in Apulia, Sicily, and the East, were lost in victory or servitude among the vanquished nations."

Historians have not as yet sufficiently considered the Normans as a whole. They have adopted as their basis chronicles and records which describe chiefly the actions of the higher classes, and whose allusions to the middle and lower classes are slight and transient, and hence the ablest English historians at variance on questions of importance are found. Then some the Norman settlement at the Conquest presents itself in the aspect of the migration of a few thousands of knights and nobles, while others recognize in it the immigration of Normans of all classes. Yet it is obviously of the greatest importance, in a historical point of view, to determine whether the Normans were an aristocracy or a nation. It is evident that a nation cannot be dealt with as if it were an aristocracy without risk of serious error; and it may be said with deference that if historians had from circumstance been enabled to devote more time and attention to leading questions of this nature, their views of history might have been in some important respects modified.

History throws very little light on the fate of the Normans after the twelfth century, however, the problem of their later existence has not been resolved. It is not, in fact, conversant with the minuter and more detailed inquiries which would alone enable it to determine such questions of fact. From the twelfth century distinctions of race in England entirely disappear from the surface of history, and the continuance and position of the Norman race are merely subjects of conjecture.

Bishop Odo

Bishop Odo was the half-brother of William the Conqueror, the son of William's mother, Herleva, by Herluin, a petty seigneur of Conteville in Normandy, to whom she was married after Duke Robert's death in 1035 terminated her exalted liaison. The exact date of Odo's birth is unknown, for although William of Malmesbury declares that Herleva and Herluin were married before Duke Robert's death, it is doubtful if the marriage could have taken place earlier than Robert's departure on the pilgrimage to Jerusalem from which he never returned. Since Odo was the eldest son of Herleva and Herluin, it is likely that he was born in 1036. His fortunate connections and youthful promise launched him upon his career at a tender age; he could not have been much more than fourteen years of age when in 1049 Duke William gave him the bishopric of Bayeux.

From the scanty records of Odo's early activities it appears that the new bishop had made himself indispensable in the duke's court even before the fateful year 1066. However, his real opportunity to prove his worth as a statesman came only during and after the conquest of England. From the moment when he launched his contingent of ships until his fall from power in 1083, the bishop of Bayeux was intimately associated with the creation and government of the new kingdom. His behavior at the Battle of Hastings has long since become a legend. Wace describes with pious enthusiasm his efforts to stir up the soldiers and to placate the Deity. Equally well-known are the representations of his conduct on the field pictured in the Bayeux Tapestry, especially the fifty-fourth panel depicting Odo, club in hand, encouraging the Normans.

When the conquest was followed by the division of the spoils, Odo found himself handsomely rewarded. A conservative estimate would place the number of tenements he received in Kent alone at well over two hundred, and he secured as many more in other English shires. Still more striking evidence of the immense extent of the bishop's Kentish estates is the small number of other tenants-in-chief of the king in that county; they numbered only eleven. In connection with his English lordships, Odo held offices and exercised jurisdiction of more exalted character than were ever again accorded a Norman bishop either in England or in the duchy. His greatest dignity was of course, the earldom of Kent with which he was probably invested shortly after William's coronation, since the king left him in control of southeastern England when he returned to Normandy in 1067.

Bishop Odo was instrumental in reducing England to obedience after Hastings; in suppressing the rising of the earls in 1075; and, that he reached the peak of his influence in 1080 after the chastisement of Northumberland.

The pride and oppression of Odo, Bishop and Earl, had grown to such a height that William's policy and his better nature both led him to put a stop to them. The special atrocities which had distinguished Odo's chastisement of Northumberland, the extortion of bribes from innocent men, the wholesale execution of men whether innocent or guilty, were deeds such as William in his worst moments had never yet either done or approved. And now a fit of ambition of still wilder kind seized on the mind of Odo. It was a small matter to rule England and Normandy, when, at least in his dreams, the lordship of the whole world offered itself to him. A soothsayer had prophesied that the successor of Hildebrand on the Papal throne should bear the name of Odo or Otto. It is not believed that Odo of Bayeux conspired the death of Gregory the Seventh, but it is certain that he took measures during Gregory's life to secure his succession to the Pontificate which in the end fell to the lot of Otto of Ostia, the famous Urban the Second. He sent to Rome; he bought himself a palace there, he filled it with goodly furniture, and spent large sums in winning favor on the spot. He even designed to cross the Alps at the head of something very like any army. Many of the Normans both in England and in Normandy, among them the Earl of Chester himself, were ready to plight their faith to him and to follow his fortunes. Odo was just on the point of setting sail for Normandy with a great array, with a view to his further journey southward. But his schemes by no means fell in with the views of his King and brother. William, who was in Normandy at the time, at once set sail for England, and suddenly met Odo in the Isle of Wight. He there gathered together a meeting of the great men of the realm, so many, we may suppose, as could be got together at a moment's notice. Before them William made his complaint against his brother. Before he crossed the sea, he had entrusted the government of England to the care of Odo. The troubles of his continen- tal dominions, the revolt of Maine, the revolt of his son, had occupied his own attention, while Odo ruled in his name in England. That rule had been a rule of oppression to all; Odo had shown himself a tyrant to the whole realm. He had oppressed the poor, he had spoiled the Church, a thing which specially grieved William's heart when he thought of all the good and pious Kings who had gone before him, and who had enriched the churches of England for purposes far other than those to which their wealth was applied by Odo. Lastly, he had persuaded William's knights, who were needed at home for the defense of the realm against the Danes and the Irish, to leave their duty and follow him beyond the Alps on vain schemes of winning dominion for himself. How, William asked of his Barons, ought he deal with such a brother as this?

The Assembly remained silent. None dared to pronounce sentence on such a criminal. Then the King himself spoke again. When one man, he said, disturbs the common wealth of the whole land, he should not be spared out of any personal favor. He bade his Barons seize Odo and put him in ward. But there was no man there who dared to lay hands on a Bishop. Then William seized his brother with his own hands. "I am a clerk," cried Odo, "and a minister of the Lord. It is not lawful to condemn a Bishop without the sentence of the Pope." Then answered William - the subtle mind of Lanfrance having, it is said, suggested the distinction - "I meddle not with clerks and Prelates. I do not seize the Bishop of Bayeux, but I do seize the Earl of Kent. I seize my Earl whom I set over my Kingdom, and I demand of him an account of the stewardship which I committed to him." While the complaints of the Bishop of Bayeux were thus unheeded, the Earl of Kent was carried off to Normandy and was kept in ward in the castle of Rouen. His imprisonment was heard of with great indignation by the Pontiff whom he had hoped to succeed. Gregory, in his private correspondence with Hugh Archbishop of Lyons, used very strong language indeed as to the insolence which the King of the English showed - certainly not for the first time - in putting a priest in prison. To William himself he used milder language, but he had nothing to urge in Odo's favor beyond the stock passages of Scripture which were held to forbid the laying of profane hands upon the Lord's anointed. But William was not to be moved, and Odo remained in prison till William's general release of his prisoners on his deathbed.

Bishop Odo was restored to some of his old honors by this event; he was nevertheless compelled to occupy a position second to the bishop of Durham in the government of William Rufus. The temptation to conspiracy was irresistible, and in 1087 Odo headed a plot to drive the Red King out of England and to place another nephew, Robert Curthose, Duke of Normandy, on the throne. Failing by a narrow margin, he was stripped finally and completely of all his English estates and offices and compelled henceforth to quit the kingdom. Odo returned to Normandy, and was involved in several other uprisings, apparently without success. Joining the crusade, in order to escape the wrath of William Rufus, he died in Sicily in February 1097 on his was to the Holy Land.

Bayeux Tapestry

For nearly nine centuries the Bayeux Tapestry has preserved the glory of the Norman conquest of England and the drama of Harold Godwinson of Wessex and William of Normandy. Never before had it been published in color in its entirety in a magazine, until National Geographic sent a team of color craftsmen to France, to photo this priceless masterpiece. By special permission of the Mayor and the City of Bayeux, the glass casing was removed from the 231 foot long Tapestry so the photographers could achieve the finest reproductions of the work ever made. In the magazine, August 1966, the full Tapestry stretches before you - a magic carpet for a journey back to the stirring days of the Conquest.

The mammoth piece of embroidery, stitched with colored wools on a linen background, was probably commissioned by Bishop Odo of Bayeux, William's half brother, for display in the Cathedral of Bayeux, consecrated only 11 years after the Battle of Hastings.

Picture story for an illiterate public, the Tapestry presents the Norman view that Harold, having sworn to help William become King of England, had no right to accept the throne himself. Some Englishmen cite the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle's statement that King Edward "entrusted the realm - to Harold", and believe he died defending his country from "the invader".

The only work of its kind to survive the early Middle Ages, the embroidery presents a moving pageant of the life of those times. Ships plow the seas. Knights ride to battle. Castles and towns and great halls provide the states for kings and dukes.

The first specific mention of the Tapestry comes in a 1476 inventory of the Cathedral of Bayeux. In 1792 French revolutionaries used it as a wagon cover until a local lawyer rescued it. Two years later it was almost cut up to decorate a holiday float. It spent a part of World War II in Paris, wound on a huge spool in a cellar of the Louvre.

Today the former Bishop's Place across from the Cathedral of Bayeux displays the embroidery, protected by glass and special lighting to prevent the colors from fading. Visitors listen to recorded commentary as they examine the scene.

There are only six names mentioned in the Tapestry: William, and his two half-brothers, Odo and Robert. Others - Wadard, Vatil and Turald. Wadard is in Plate X of the tapestry, page 235 of the magazine, over the head of a mounted warrior, without his helmet, but with shield and spear, are the words "Hic est Wadard".

This is Latin, meaning "Here is Wadard". He stands between the soldiers who hasten to Hastings and the preparation of refreshments.

Scourge the Countryside From Pevensey to Hastings toward Hastings, a more suitable harbor if escape should prove necessary. Marauding and pillaging, the duke hopes to provoke Harold into immediate battle while his supplies hold and before the English forces can rest and recoup. Sheep, oxen, and pigs fall prey to the soldiers.

The Conqueor's Companions
(established with certainty)

Some seven to ten thousand men accompanied Duke William across the English Channel in September 1066. Others came from Normandy afterward, and several Normans are known to have been resident in England before the Conquest. The names of a few men, who fought at Hastings, are established with certainty, for they appear in the best respected contemporary authorities. The names of another three hundred rest on circumstantial evidence.

Professor David Douglas, who has discussed the question in History, Vol. XXVIII (1943), lists 32 names vouched for by evidence deduced from the Bayeux Tapestry, William of Poitiers, Guy of Amiens, Ordecus Vitalis and various Norman charters:

Eustace, Count of Boulogne
Robert, Count of Mortain
William, son of Richard, Count of Evreux
Geoffrey, son of Rotrou, Count of Mortagne
Eude, Bishop of Bayeux (Odo)
Geoffrey, Bishop of Coutances
William Fitz-Osbern
Aimeri, Vicomte of Thouars
Walter Giffard
Ralf de Tosny
Hugh de Montfort
Hugh de Grandmesnil
William de Warenne
Robert, son of Roger do Beaumont
William Malet
Guilbert d' Auffay
Robert de Vitot
Engenulf de Laigle
Gerelmus de Panleuse
Robert Fitz-Erneis
Roger, son to Turold
Turstin, son of Rollo
Erchembald, son of Erchembald the Vicomte
Vitalis
Wadard
Taillefer
A member of the house of Ponthieu (perhaps Count Guy I)
Gerald the Seneschal
Rodulf the Chamberlain (of Tancarville)
Hugh d'Ivry, the Butler
Richard Fitz-Gilbert
Pons

Two other "lists" have been compiled. In 1866, a roll of names was drawn up by a committee of French scholars, and three years later 485 names were inscribed on the west wall of the church at Dives, where the Conqueror and his companions, heard mass before embarking. In 1931, 315 names compiled by Professors M. Jackson Crispin (Princeton University) and Leonce Macary (College of Falaise), were inscribed on a bronze tablet which was placed in the chapel of the chateau of Falaise. For these 315 names, in the view of those scholars, "strong presumption" exists.

Both rolls are based on the recognized sources, on Domesday Book and the best respected copies of Battle Abbey Roll. Clearly, the Domesday Survey, which recorded the owners of land in England in 1086, is no certain guide as to whether or not those men "came over with the Conqueror", for some may have been their sons, or they may have crossed the Channel before or after 1066. Conversely, the omission of a name from Domesday does not prove that a man did not fight at Hastings, for many of the Conqueror's followers were not rewarded with land in England.

Battle Abbey Roll, which may have been based on the list recorded at Dives and which may have been read after the battle to ascertain who was alive and who was dead, disappeared in the fourteenth century. It is known only in copies, of which the best respected are those made by Holinshed and Leland.

Wadard

Odo of Bayeux, the third Norman Bishop, had been under arrest since 1082, but the manors assigned to him in Oxfordshire Domesday show that he was the greatest landowner in the county at the time of his fall. His holdings, like that of the Bishop of Lisieux and Coutances, was a personal grant from the king, and on, if not before, his death in 1097 it was disintegrated, some of his tenants' fees becoming separate baronies, while others were annexed to the existing fiefs of different tenants in chief. Historically, the most interesting of his tenants is the Wadard who held of him in Oxfordshire at Tythorp, Fringford, Wilcote, Brighthampton, Cassington, South Newington, Barton Ede, Balscot, Little Tew in Wooten, and Coggs. These, with Wadard's lands in other counties, afterwards formed the barony of Arsic, of which Coggs was the head.

Arsic

Barons by Tenure
1. Hen I. 1. Manasser Arsic; living 1103.
11. Hen. I. 2. Robert Arsic, s.and h.; ob.
III. Steph. 3. Manasser Arsic, s. and h.; 1167
IV. Hen. II. 4. Alexander Arsic, s. and h.; living 1196.
V. Rich. 5. John Arsic, s. and h.; ob ante 1205, s.p.
VI. John 6. Robert Arsic, bro. and h.; ob. circa 1230, leaving his 2 Dau his heirs:--Joan, wife of Eustance de Greinville, and after of--Simeon; and Alice, wife of Thomas de Haye. End of Arsic barony.

Wadard held a total of 32 knights fees as tenant in chief under Bishop Odo. (16,000 acres). A normal knights fees was about 500 acres. He also, held one knights fee under King William and two mills in Dove.

It is also probable that the Son of Wadard, who held of Roger d'Ivry at Barford Cheney on the Abbey's land and at Thrup on Roger's own honor was identical with the 'Walchelin Waard' who occurs on the Oxfordshire Pipe Roll of 1130, and whose daughter brought Barford Cheney by marriage to the family from which it derived its distinctive name.

Following the death of Bishop Odo in 1097, and the disintegration of his land holdings in England, no further records was found pertaining to Wadard.

Henry Woodard

The Woodard's were among the earliest English immigrants to the American Colonies, the first recorded having been Henry who came to Virginia in 1619, 371 years ago, arriving aboard the ship Diana, with his wife Jane. England had established its first permanent colony at Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607. It was promoted by the London Company, under charter granted by King James I. The company proposed to seek gold and set up trading posts. They arrived in April and sailed thirty miles up a river which they named James for the King. The party of 105 men landed on low, wooded peninsula. This first party faced many hardships and uncertainties of existence which endured for years. There was much quarreling among the settlers as they lacked leadership. Food supply was limited and only a few of the settlers were inclined to grow crops or hunt for game. Some were aristocratic gentlemen who scorned work. Others were adventurers intent on hunting for gold. Still others were paupers or convicts recruited by the company. Consequently, no progress was made in developing of Jamestown that first year.

The colony had been built on the edge of a swamp and malarial fever set in. Many of the settlers died. The Indians could not be trusted. They would offer food on one visit and often attack on the next. Family life in Virginia started in 1619 at Jamestown. That spring ninety young and well recommended maids were sent to become the wives of the settlers. The bachelors met them at the wharf and each made his choice. The young woman's consent was obtained, per passage was paid by the husband-to-be and a minister united them. Several couples were married in the first hour. All were married within a week. Marked progress had been made by the colony since Captain John Smith's departure in 1609 during the early crisis. Henry Woodard and wife, apparently arrived on the same ship along with the young maidens. John Rolfe had married Pochontas in 1614. He had found a way to cure tobacco for smoking. Rolfe's process made tobacco a highly profitable crop. Farms, with tobacco as their principal crop, were increased in size. New acreage was cleared for farms. More and more workers were required to till the soil, plant tobacco and finally harvest the crop. The first Negro workers were brought to Jamestown in 1619 when a Dutch privateer landed twenty African captives in the colony. The Dutch had taken the captives from a Spanish Slave ship. They offered the human cargo for sale at Jamestown so cheaply that the planters bought them merely as a bargain. They paid for the captives with tobacco. This gave them the idea of using the newcomers as laborers on the tobacco farms.

Most of the captives were put to work in the tobacco fields, while the others were given jobs in Jamestown homes. In the beginning , the newcomers from Africa's slave coast were not called slaves. Early court records listed them as indentured servants. "Indentured" designated a person who, voluntarily or involuntarily, had been sold into servitude. Such servants normally obtained freedom after a specified number of years of working for their expenses. They enjoyed a measure of freedom and some privileges.

Virginia's tobacco growing had increased greatly since John Rolfe introduced his method of curing the plant for smoking. Up to 1619, work on the tobacco farms had been done largely by white indentured servants. Some workers were debtors who had sold themselves into service to pay their debts and buy passage to America. Others were ex-convicts recruited by the London Company with the promise of new lives in America. Arrivals of the newcomers changed conditions. The Negroes were workers who were deemed to require only shelter and food. Thus the seeds of slavery was planted in English colonies in America. The captive cargoes began to arrive in increasing numbers, filling the need for workers.

England's second colony in America was established in what now is Massachusetts a year later. The Pilgrims left England to escape religious persecution and finally settled in Plymouth in 1620. They had broken from the Church of England over conflicting beliefs and were known as Separatists. They obtained a grant of land from the Virginia Company (formerly London Company). They were scheduled to settle in Virginia, but due to a storm at sea, the Mayflower was driven off course and after sixty-five days, late in November, sighted the bleak Massachusetts coast. The Pilgrims realized they were far away from the land assigned to them, but decided to remain in the area "where God has guided us".

Henry Woodard was born in England, about 1595. He was 24 years of age at the time of his arrival in Jamestown. Henry survived the Indian massacre that took place on Good Friday, March 22, 1622. Total killed in this massacre was 347, out of a population of 1,240. Fifty-three of this number were killed on the Edward Bennett plantation. A roster of names of the living in Virginia, February 16, 1624, at Warwick Squeake, lists a Henry Woodard. Muster of the inhabitants in Virginia taken in 1625 totaled 1,095. The muster of the inhabitants in Wariscoyack, taken February 7, 1625, lists Henry as follows:

Henrie Woodward His Muster
"Henrie Woodward, aged 30, in the Diana
John Browninge, aged 22, in the Abigail 1621
Servants.
Ambrose, aged 25, in the Marmiducke 1621
Peeter, aged 19, in the Margett and John 1620"

Henry Woodard died without heirs.

Petition[1] of the Governor, Council and Colony of Virginia, Assembled Together, to the King.

(Abstract.)

June (?), 1625.

Petition of the Governor, Council and Colony of Virginia assembled together to the King. Refer to their petition "in the former year" (see July, 1624, Col. Papers, Vol. 3, no. 21), sent by the hands of John Puntis. Are driven to misdoubt by reason of the death of Puntis and that many things have fallen out contrary to their humble desires that said petitions and relations were never presented to his Royal hands, the rather because the same persons so justly complained of, are joined in his Maj. Commission for governing the affairs of Virginia wherewith being armed, the Petitioners fear they intend to exercise the same tyranny upon petitioners persons which already by the pernicious contract they execute upon petitioners fortunes—Have just cause to fear that upon the establishing of a President and Council in England for the government of Virginia, if those persons shall be chosen of that number, the same power and means to execute their vindictive malice may be more fully and absolutely confirmed and the state of the Colony much more desperate—the effects whereof already begin to appear not only in the scant supply of necessaries this year, not sufficient to cover their nakedness and the rates threefold more excessive than formerly—but also in the extreme discouragement in that great numbers of planters had resolved to have gone for England in these ships expressly to have petitioned his Maj. for redress and protection. But lest the clamour of so many should be troublesome & displeasing to his Majesty—have made choice of Sir George Yeardley—the importance of the cause requiring one who having formerly commanded here in chief and by immediate commission from his Maj. hath again been nominated to succession in the Government, to prefer said petition and relations whereby it will most clearly appear how unfit they are to manage the affairs of this Colony in which they have formerly so much erred even in the fundamental points of Government—Beseech his Majesty to afford a gracious hearing to Sir George Yeardley and to refer

MIGRATION OF THE WOODARDS

The migration of the Woodard families is shown on the following map on page 28. It resembles a westward movement that is historically typical of many of our early day settlers.

It begins in the Isle of Wight County, Virginia in the early 1600's and proceeds south to North Carolina in the middle 1700's. The Woodard families were found in many North Carolina counties namely Nash, Wayne, Johnston, and Edgecombe.

From North Carolina the families began to move westward through the states of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisana. One large Quaker group traveled North and West to Indiana to other similar Quaker communities.

From the Southern states mentioned above the Woodard families migrated to Texas in the original counties of Hunt, Fannin, Coleman, Bosque, and Nolan.

Although the Woodard families have since spread into all fifty states, many descendents of the early day Texas settlers still live in Texas.
